Simply More Training and More Education. Because, you Need it BEFORE you Need it.

You must be competent.

During live fire instruction at the range, you will learn many concepts, and perform related drills, including:

- Tueller drill and recordation of results for potential legal defense;
- making the decision on whether to draw or not draw; seeking cover; drawing methods; moving to the left, right, forward, and backward;
- Firing body to body (against the “attacker”) (your gun in close retention);
- Drawing your gun, moving to cover; firing left and right barricade; hi - low barricade; changing location; reloading during course of fire; grounded shooting; two handed shooting; safe hand changes ; and one-hand shooting (left and right hands);
- “Calling” the police and practicing what to do / not do after a shooting; avoiding “reflexive spin”; considerations and actual live fire practice on how to “drop” gun when ordered by the “police”; and doing a post shooting “interview”.

How many of your friends have a CCW? How many have truthfully confided in you that they don't carry because they don't feel comfortable with their gun? Or, have they confessed that they don't know how to draw and holster properly? Have they admitted to not having trained on what to do with the firearm following a shooting? Can they actually hit what they intend to?

Have you considered that sometimes following the advice

— “do what the police tell you” - could get you SHOT!

The time and place is up to him. ...

Being prepared is up to YOU!

Can you make that Hostage Head Shot at 5 yards? 7 yards? 10 Yards? You must know what you are capable of. With live fire drills, you will practice shooting at moving “heads” simulating a hostage taking in your home.

In class you will review flash card scenes. With each you must articulate what you did, what you didn't do and why or why not. For example: was the person a deadly threat? Why or why not? When did he become a deadly threat? Did you draw your gun? Did you move to cover? Did you attempt to de-escalate? Did you broaden your focus from the gun? What is your reactionary gap? Did you use Code words for family? Etc... . You will evaluate each scene based upon deadly force lecture, video, California jury instructions, your experience on the range, and more.
